*Information for Authors and
Editorial Policy*

Lakota Books was founded in 1990 for the purpose of writing, publishing, and distributing monographs and books about Lakota and Dakota culture, history, and language. We also republish out-of-print classics, mainly in facsimile form. Occasionally, we publish books about other American Indian cultures.

We encourage new writers to submit manuscripts of varying lengths, but we prefer manuscripts of 120 pages or less.

We are particularly interested in publishing the works of Lakota and Dakota people, and we encourage works in the native language, or bilingually. We are proud that we have published the first Lakota dictionary by a Lakota scholar, Edward Starr, an Oglala from Pine Ridge, and soon will publish a series of bilingual essays by Ivan F. Star, also of Pine Ridge.

We also are interested in publishing children's stories since many of our books are used in schools attended by Native Americans. We want to begin providing works of high quality to these children for whom very little culturally-relevant materials exist. As a start, we are beginning to republish a series of bilingual readers in Lakota and English written especially for young people. These books also are perfect for anyone beginning to learn the Lakota language.

We particularly are attentive to recent concerns of Lakota and Dakota people with respect to the use of tribal names, or other materials that are stereotypical or otherwise insensitive to native cultures.

As a major guideline (except for reprints over which we have no control, and direct quotes from earlier works), the terms Lakota, Nakota, Dakota always are used to indicate the major divisions of the Oceti Sakowin (Seven Fireplaces) and its respective language dialects. The term "Sioux," which, despite its prevalence in the literature, is considered derogatory and thus is unacceptable. Terms like Teton Dakota, Santee Dakota, Teton Sioux, etc. are not acceptable either because they are contradictory (Teton do not speak Dakota, they speak Lakota), redundant (Santee are Dakota, hence Santee is sufficient), or Teton Sioux (which is both redundant and derogatory). Subdivisions, such as Oglala, Sicangu, etc, may stand alone unless the author believes there is a need for clarification (e.g. Oglala Lakota).

We also are interested in maintaining conformity in spelling these languages recognizing that some older works must retain their original orthographies. Thus we employ the orthographic conventions of the Buechel system (Eugene Buechel, Grammar of Lakota, 1939; and Lakota-English Dictionary, 1970 for Lakota; and Stephen R. Riggs A Dakota-English Dictionary, 1993 [1890] for Dakota).

We will be happy to help authors render Lakota and Dakota words accordingly, recognizing that some may not have the technical capabilities to write these orthographies on their typewriters or computers.

Manuscripts may be submitted at any time. We can respond to them in about six weeks. If accepted and written on computer, we prefer to receive a disc compatible with WordPerfect 5.1 or 6.0.
